

The supertanker and the running tap

Despite its own good – though arrogant – feeling about itself, being so rational, the West acts perfectly irrational. If you're a perfectionist this is of course nice to notice. The thing is that people let themselves be made sick and ill on a truly massive scale – I'm not talking about the covid jabs specifically – all the more so since the beginning of the 20th century, perhaps most of all by the Rockefellers and the many perpetrators collaborating with them or on their own. People taking death shots in 2021 – and still – was rather the culmination point of a much longer history.

And what has been the West's brilliant solution to its populations becoming increasingly chronically sick at a rapid pace? They built a huge health machine to try to make people less sick. Well, at least that's the narrative, the official goal – the medical industry itself has other plans. To think that the profits of the pharmaceutical industry are the most relevant contribution to the economic growth figures of a country, which is, again perfectly, absurd. Again, nice for the perfectionists.

As I said before, 1 out of 7 workers work in health care. This is not only revealing the apparent sickness of the population, but is sick in itself.

Hilariously and sadly, many people assume that people in the so-called Third World – that have since long been brutally exploited by the West – are considerably less intelligent. This haughty attitude certainly extends to native people living in the jungle or wherever, despite some romanticism in our attitude regarding them. The truth is the opposite. There are communities in India for instance where employees of the World Health Organization better not show up, for they may be lynched by the local people who are aware that (the employers of) such people have made them and their families ill or even killed them. So, they go after them if they show up nonetheless, and they are lucky if they are just beaten up.

In the civilized West people would not even think of such brutality, such supposed primitivism. No, they let themselves be debilitated, injured, handicapped for life – and regularly also killed – and in their goodness they set up a huge health system to make the injured people feel less bad, give them the feeling that the system cares about them, does something to help them. There are hundreds of thousands kinds of pills people can swallow in this brilliant Western system, born straight out of the highest divine intelligence.

They won't come together and go to the offices of the Rockefellers and friends and drag them out and beat them up, or worse. We are not that primitive, we are intelligent, we are morally sound. We let the debilitating of our health just go on and on and on and on and on. Our solution is to try to get better, individually – we are individuals in the West after all. We are intelligent. We see our practitioner to see what he or she can do for us.

And if, despite our intelligence, we discover at some point that something must be really wrong, incorrect, we, civilized as we are, are going to the court – also a huge 'intelligent' system in the West set up to protect the interests of the rich, of the cheaters, the elite. Yeah, we believe in our great judicial system, fair to everyone as it is. We put a suit on, we put our tie on, and we are going to start a 'procedure'. Instead of dragging, we 'proceed'.

And hope for a miracle of justice, that the judge sentences that we are right. And of course, democratic as we are of our nature, we accept the sentence of the judge, as if that person is God himself. In reality, we are totally confused in all of this. Accepting a multitude of things, rules, sentences, systems, that are obviously anti-nature.

In an organically functioning society, where intelligence has not been deafened, deadened, covered up by a vast amount of dirty subtle sneaky lies that has been propagandized into people's consciousness, people go to the offices and drag. Considering what authorities have the guts for to do to people it is extremely rare, but sometimes it does happen, somewhere in what has denigratingly been called the Third World, not in the 'civilized world'.

People have been so brainwashed that they cannot see the simple truth of what I'm saying in this piece. In the best case it is a bit confusing, makes one think for a moment, but anyway, still people would not want to sacrifice their beautifully set up health system monster for going back to supposedly primitive 'dragging' and beating up as a way of dealing with attacks on our health. People are too civilized to get to the perpetrators and stuff them full with their own fabricated pills that are apparently so effective. Swallow! Here another 72 jabs that you have inserted our children with, you can have them all. To get better and better and better, protected for life, and you'll get the same treatment in a few months, or next year. All for your own good. When people pay you back finally, it is all for your own good, that's important to understand while you are beaten up and feel some tendency coming up to protest or complain. You'll be beaten up by philanthropists, people who care.

I say that we live in a sick society. Really sick sick sick. Sick to the bone. But once you function in it, you don't see it any more, usually. Until one has a breakdown of whatever kind and one comes back to his or her senses, more or less. Having a paid job is, generally speaking, not advantageous for the development or preservation of one's natural intelligence. It weakens us. It distorts our natural perception and takes over the way society looks at things. People heavily underestimate the role of resonance. People, by nature, resonate with the environment they live, and work, in.

When society is steered in a certain direction, 'for instance' by an ee (evil elite) – it is – people easily go along with this on the base of resonance. If around 1913 the whole health care – much smaller as it was at the time, but anyway – is suddenly marginalized or abolished, made illegal, taken over by the Rockefellers and their bandits, people – even though there is some resistance here and there – easily submit to the new way, the new leaders in the field that are pushing top down their new narrative into people's minds helped by supposed scientists in their white coats that are somehow respected by people, associated as white is with pure, holy, clean.

A few sick of heart have the whole West in its grip and spread their sickness of heart through the entire societies. Resonating, we become sick, too. We are living, acting out their sickness of heart in our own bodies – just like on seeming individual level I live in my body people's sickness (or karma); although in my case I make it conscious, and that makes a difference. Are people aware of the elite's sickness of heart they are living through?

A society that, as a supertanker, cannot turn its course when things are obviously going wrong, is sick, to a worrying degree. It needs to go to the doctor. But there is none. Intelligent people, thinking out of the box, maybe even still carrying some heart, are marginalized, not taken seriously, silenced, or (shadow) banned, prosecuted, sometimes killed.

A society that runs on money is sick. This is a simple law. Money is not (part of) our organic nature. It is a sickening substitute. It is debilitating our nature, overshadowing it. The ones who run the money system are the worst criminals here on earth. We allow them by respecting the system they have built to protect their debilitating sickening procedures. In a money driven system, sooner or later a fight of the 1 % against the 99 % cannot be prevented. It is like the water in the river flowing down to the sea.

Money drives communities apart. It is more and more everyone for himself and his family. And once the attack on us becomes undeniable, even for the mass of sheep, then we don't know any more how to stand up, how to organize ourselves. We don't know how to get to the offices and drag the perpetrators out, take away all their assets and start anew. We try to deal with the system of the sickness – creating an ever expanding health care system, creating a giant soap bubble of a judicial system – instead of going after the root cause of the sickness. In sense, just normal intelligence, one first stops the tap from creating more flood, simply by closing it, before dealing with the consequences of the flood. But not in the West. The running tap – our capitalism – is holy. We only allow ourselves to, with our good hearts, mop the flood.

Oh Holy Running Tap, we love you and adore you till the end of times, we'll sweep and mop the floor for you for ever, humbly on our knees. You are the Truth, the Provider of Life, we exist only thanks to You, as You, You keep us alive in these difficult times of floods.

Generally, people's attitude is to 'go with the flow'. If the water runs down, you are going down too. It is more straining to struggle yourself up against the waterfall. It's more comfortable to believe that everything is being taken care of, than taking care, to believe that others know what they are doing, than knowing. People put their trust in the sick of heart who do not know what they are doing, for with a closed blind heart it is not possible to know.

The only 'good' thing about us all becoming sick seems that it gives an opportunity to realize states beyond the lower realms of life. The body has lost, so we are almost forced to explore other realms of life.

But finding relief in spirituality is not the way out. We must find back our inner and outer strength. Get in touch again with our primitive nature. That people are afraid of this – since they lost it, and are afraid of directness, of aggression involved in it, too – doesn't mean it doesn't have good qualities that we shouldn't use.

It is the wealthy elite that promotes human values (to others), like always staying peaceful – so that we won't come back to our senses and use our primitive defence mechanisms. They keep on pushing us up to our minds, via a multitude of ways, so they can (more) easily control us. They are afraid of the instinctive forces in people that, they fear, will sooner or later turn against them – because somewhere they know very well that they are such a selfish morons, such a cheaters, such a liars, such a heartless killers.

We should not forget or learn or be reminded that intelligence – which should also be used for survival – is not based in the mind, even though in the West this is assumed to be so. Intelligence is holistic. It also includes the mind level of life, but that's just one level. Other levels, like basic instinct, emotion, spirit, energy, Consciousness all contribute to and are integral part of real intelligence. If all spheres of life are included in a balanced way, we may call this intelligence indeed. The Western one-sided mind 'intelligence' is far from that, the West where the youth is being educated into unintelligence nowadays, sad as it is. It is the deluding Force at work that is easily succeeding in making people believe that (a developed) mind is the source of intelligence – while in fact the very disproportional emphasis on the mind and thinking makes us terribly weak.

When people are told we can fly to the moon, we assume we are intelligent... We are deceived. We never flew to the moon. We believe in stories. This is the mind's intelligence. It cannot distinguish. It believes what it wants to believe.

Can a tree live only as its leaves? Can it live without roots?
